Manhattan Residential Market Report

Second Quarter 2011

CHRISTIE'S

Manhattan Cooperatives and Condominiums

The average Manhattan apartment price rose 4\% over the past year to $$ 1,430,432$, as sales over $$ 5$ million accounted for a larger share of the market. The median price, which measures the middle of the market, fell $1 \%$ over this time to $$ 835,000$. There was less activity than a year ago, with reported closings falling 7\% compared to the second quarter of 2010.

While the average cooperative sale price jumped $14 \%$ from a year ago, this is due mainly to increased bigh-end activity. Sales of co-ops for at least $$ 10$ million almost doubled compared to 2010's second quarter. This helped bring the average three-bedroom and larger co-op price $28 \%$ bigher than a year ago, while it was virtually unchanged for all other size categories.
