Former Houston Rockets center Dikembe Mutombo has made the most of his post-basketball career, raising money through his charitable foundation. He was praised by President Bush in his 2007 State of the Union address for helping to build the first new hospital in the Republic of Congo, Mutombo's homeland, in 40 years. The NY Times Big Deal column reports that the seven-foot-two-inch athlete has put his apartment at Trump Place in New York City up for sale for $4.5 million.

The unit is a three-bedroom condo on the 42nd floor. It is around 1,900 square feet and property records from Property Shark indicate that he bought the unit for $2.576 million in 2004. The apartment has river and skyline views from all three bedrooms. Building amenities include a health club, business center, valet service and party room. The apartment is listed by Heather E. Stein of Brown Harris Stevens.
